

Neuroendocrine Cells are Translators

They take electrical signals from your brain and translate them into chemical signals that can be understood by the other organs in your body

